Tip	Why
Don't duplicate. Make sure the event isn't already posted or submitted.	This helps us avoid repeat submissions/entries, reduces wasted time and effort for everyone, and confusion for web visitors.
Submit early. Allow several days for us to get to and post your event.	The process is not instant or automatic; a human with many other responsibilities has to receive your submitted info and then transfer it to the calendar. We may also have questions for you.
Provide all requested information, even if tentative.	You can always indicate that details are tentative, and then update them later. But the calendar system will not post events that don't have titles, dates and times, at a minimum.
Be brief.	There is limited space for both event title and descriptions. The calendar is intended as a quick glance resource, directing visitors to other sources for more complete details.
Be meaningful.	The title and description should (briefly) provide visitors everything they need to quickly decide if your event is appropriate and of interest: Don't assume everyone knows abbreviations or other jargon. Specify the intended audience.

If it helps: Pretend you don't know anything about the group or event, but happen to find the calendar entry. What would want to know, to make a quick decision on whether and how to find and more, and participate.

UPDATES/CHANGES

once the event has been posted:

1. Send an email to igr@du.edu
2. Containing very clear instructions about what needs to change from what's already posted.

DO NOT send all event info again. We only need to know what specifically needs to be changed/added.

DO NOT send a flyer, direct us to a website, etc. This does indicate what's new/different; and we don't have time to retype all the information.
