

Who We Are

The International Studies Schools Association promotes quality international education and assists educators nation-wide in their efforts to prepare their students for a rapidly expanding era of globalization.

Headquartered at one of the nation's leading schools of international affairs, the University of Denver's Graduate School of International Studies, the Association works with the Center for Teaching International Relations (CTIR) to bring members together for conferences and staff development opportunities.

ISSA charter members currently represent over twenty-five public and private, magnet and charter schools nation-wide, and member teachers are committed to cultivating a stronger global perspective among students and equipping our children with the tools needed to become active participants in the global community.

What We Offer

To facilitate the further development and improvement of international studies in the classroom, ISSA member educators, schools, and organizations can take advantage of services that include:

- Consulting and advising services for districts and schools considering the establishment of international studies programs. Experienced administrators and teachers will provide valuable assistance for initiating international studies programs, encouraging best practices, incorporating state standards into the international curriculum, developing appropriate technology, and working with district administration.
- Professional development opportunities in both content areas and methodological approaches related to contemporary themes in international studies.
- Exclusive access to a computer databank of curriculum materials, classroom activities, and samples of course syllabi. This will provide member educators with new ideas and lesson plans for practical application in their classrooms. Many of these handbooks and guides will also be available in publication.
- Participation in annual conferences exploring current issues in international affairs and teaching international studies. ISSA members will enjoy discounted conference, institute, and materials fees.

Additional Services for ISSA Members:

- Connections with colleagues involved in international studies programs through a central web-based internet community. This will provide more specialized resources and information based on individual and organizational needs.
- Opportunities for participation in international travel study programs as available.
- With membership in the ISSA, you will also receive our bi-annual newsletter, information about other grant possibilities, and expanded links with other international organizations.
