

HONOR CODE STATEMENT

All members of the University of Denver are expected to uphold the values of Integrity, Respect, and Responsibility. These values embody the standards of conduct for students, faculty, staff, and administrators as members of the University community. Our values are defined as:

- Integrity: acting in an honest and ethical manner;
- Respect: honoring differences in people, ideas, and opinions;
- Responsibility: accepting ownership for one's own conduct.

(www.du.edu/ccs/honorcode)

Faculty: What should you do if you think someone has violated the Honor Code?

Reporting Honor Code Violations

Every member of the University community is expected to report apparent violations of the Honor Code. A violation is reported when the Academic Dishonesty Allegations Form (ADAF) is submitted to the Office of Student Conduct.

Before initiating a formal inquiry or filing an ADAF, any member of the University Community who becomes aware of an actual or possible violation of the Honor Code may consult with CCS to request anonymous advice as to the nature of the procedures, gather information about available options, or use CCS as a sounding board to discuss the situation. No records are kept of such consultations.

Faculty members may also talk with the student suspected of a violation about possible Honor Code violations for purposes that include, but are not limited to, gathering additional information and clarifying perceptions of student behaviors. Although DU's Honor Code permits instructors to make individual judgments about first instances of academic dishonesty, instructors are strongly encouraged to refer all violations of the Honor Code to the Office of Student Conduct so that the University can maintain consistency across cases. Honor Code violations are more than a private issue between instructor and students; they are a matter of community concern and accountability.

Questions? Contact Kristin Olson, Director of Citizenship and Community Standards at x14504 or kristin.olson@du.edu.

Students: What should you do if you think someone has violated the Honor Code?

Reporting Honor Code Violations

Every member of the University community is expected to report apparent violations of the Honor Code to the appropriate faculty member, academic unit, and/or the Office of Student Conduct (CCS). Honor Code violations are a matter of community concern and accountability.

Before initiating a formal complaint, any member of the University Community who becomes aware of an actual or possible violation of the Honor Code may consult with CCS to request anonymous advice as to the nature of the procedures, gather information about available options, or use CCS as a sounding board to discuss the situation. No records are kept of such consultations.

Questions?

Contact Kristin Olson, Director of Citizenship and Community Standards at x14504 or kristin.olson@du.edu.