Job/Internship Search Engines

Contacts: Ask people working in your field, ask your professors, and ask your friends for leads to people they may know who might consider hiring an intern. In general, 2/3 of internships and jobs are found through networking and word of mouth. Talk with everyone about what you want!

Creating Your Own: Some of the best internships are ones you create to fit your specific needs and interests. If you know what you want to learn and where you would like to learn it and why, you can propose an internship. Emphasize what the organization is likely to gain from hiring such a motivated and focused person as you. You will be demonstrating initiative and you probably won't have any competition!
