

The Law Family

A LEGACY OF EXCELLENCE

Joseph and Loretta Law saw opportunity in the midst of difficulty and optimism in the face of heartbreak. In doing so, they taught their four sons—Dennis, Ronald, Christopher and Jeremy—the power of philanthropy and the importance of community engagement. Overcoming political hardship in China while raising a family, Joseph and Loretta instilled in their boys a desire for excellence and the understanding that hard work would reap great benefits.

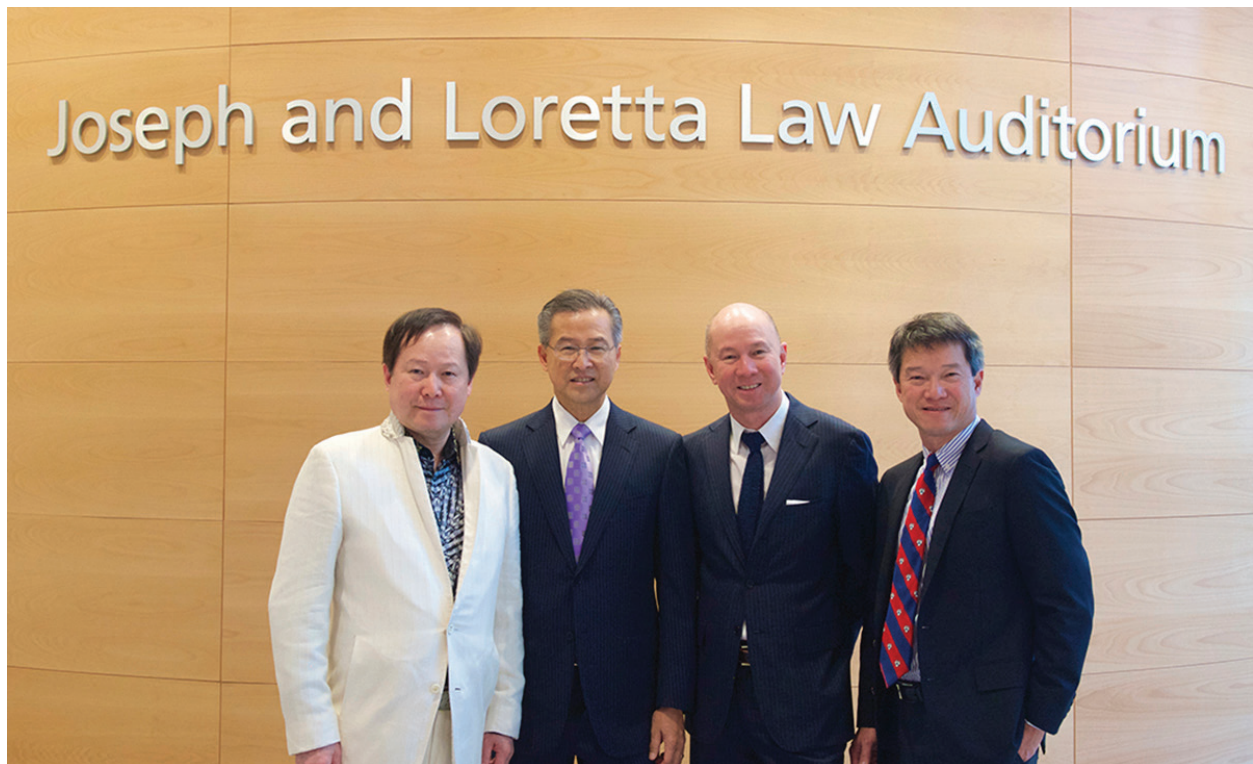

Joseph Law worked tirelessly through economic prosperity and times of uncertainty to become a successful businessman who possessed a love of family, life and play. Joseph founded Smile Industries and was the manufacturing force behind toys that became American cultural icons—Cabbage Patch Kids, Stars Wars toys and many others. As their father became a successful industrialist and advocate for workplace standards, the boys dove into higher education in America—all four receiving degrees in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania. They all came to call the state of Colorado home, and Joseph and Loretta followed suit, enjoying much of their 69 years of marriage in the Centennial State.

Inspired by their parents, the Law brothers have worked tirelessly in their careers by helping others, while always keeping a close connection to their communities and the opportunities that exist for creating new points of excellence. Philanthropy is a tradition in the Law family, exemplified by Joseph and Loretta to their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Dennis, Ronald, Christopher and Jeremy have honored their parents with a named facility at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School, where Joseph and Loretta's legacy will last in perpetuity.

Innovative and interdisciplinary productions highlight the Law family's commitment to taking performance to the pinnacle of excellence. For Dennis, his recent experiences in creating productions at the University of Denver—in partnership with the Newman Center for the Performing Arts and the Lamont School of Music—brought him closer to this institution of higher education. The University of Denver is proud to partner with Dennis Law on the Joseph and Loretta Law Institute of Arts & Technology. It is an embodiment of his parents' legacy of philanthropy, family and passion for the arts that provides an unprecedented opportunity to partner with a university that is innovative and has its sights set on the future of knowledge. The institute's ultimate goal is to apply cultural diversity and evolving creative technologies to train professionals in order to provide new intellectual content for the betterment of all people.
