The Power of Good

THE HEROISM OF NICHOLAS WINTON

When Nicholas Winton, a young English stockbroker, visited Prague in 1939, he learned of the plight of Jews who were fleeing the Nazis. He returned to London and, working alone, organized four trains to bring 669 children to England, where he found a foster home for each. A modest man, Winton never spoke of this until 50 years later when his wife discovered the records of his deeds. The inspiring documentary "Nicholas Winton: The Power of Good" will be introduced by Tomas Graumann, one of those fortunate to be saved by Winton's quiet heroism.
