CALL FOR APPLICATIONS:

The RMJHS and Beck Archives is pleased to invite applications for its Annual Fellowship Research Program for the 2018-19 academic year. The Fellowship Research Grant provides the successful recipient with a stipend of $1,000 for research and writing at the Beck Archives of Rocky Mountain Jewish History, a robust repository, which contains many stellar collections reflecting the history of the Jewish experience in the region, and which is located in the University Libraries on the campus of the University of Denver. The grant recipient will be expected to spend two weeks working in the Beck Archives and share their research results through either a short talk or brief paper.

Applicants for the Beck Fellowship Grant must be conducting research in some area related to the history of the Jewish life in the Rocky Mountain West. Applicants must be either Ph.D. candidates who are completing dissertations, post-doctoral scholars, or senior or independent scholars, and preference will be given to those applications that demonstrate the potential for producing publishable work.

Applicants must submit a grant application available below as well as a research proposal outline of no more than five pages, which outlines the scope of the project and the particular collections at the Beck Archives which are pertinent to their project. Applicants must also submit two letters of support, preferably from academic scholars. In the case of graduate or doctoral students, one of these letters must be from their dissertation advisor.
