Star Wars: The Power of Franchise

During Winter Interterm, I found myself sitting in the MFJS building for eight hours a day, five days in a row. Why? To immerse myself completely in the world of Star Wars and everything related to it.

IIC Students Study Food, Agriculture

In an era of Instagram famous #Foodies and the deeply addicting Chopped Junior and Great British Baking Show, it’s startling to think how little the everyday person actually engages with where their food comes from on a daily basis.
MEPC Alumni Highlighted Online

Our M.A. in Media and Public Communication program has been well-publicized over the last few months by MastersinCommunications, an online resource for people who are interested in master’s degrees in all fields related to communications.

Chair's Corner

A world-renowned journalist, an Oscar-winning screenplay writer, and an opportunity to brainstorm about how artificial intelligence can be harnessed for the public good: these are among the discussions, screenings, and opportunities taking place through our department in the coming months. All are open to students, faculty, staff, alumni, and members of the public. Mark your calendar and please plan to join us by sending a note to mfjs@du.edu!

Internships Update

Every quarter, students from all majors within the Department of Media, Film & Journalism Studies set off into the world for internships. An internship is required for Journalism and Strategic Communication majors, recommended for Media Studies and Film Studies & Production majors, and a popular capstone option for our two graduate programs: the MA in Media & Public Communication and the MA in International & Intercultural Communication. This quarter we are featuring Chelsea Hernandez’s internship with Colorado Public Television Channel 12.

Faculty Spotlight: Derigan Silver
As a professor at MFJS, the courses Dr. Silver primarily teaches are Media Law, New Media Law, and Regulation and Media and Politics. His research focus is First Amendment law, media law, and internet law.

Alumni Profile: Loosineh Markarian
Dr. Loosineh Markarian, a 2009 alumna of the MA in International and Intercultural Communication program, is a rebellious lady.

Upcoming Event: BlacKkKlansman Screening and Q&A
In April, MFJS will have the honor of hosting Kevin Willmott, Oscar-nominated co-screenwriter of the acclaimed film BlacKkKlansman on campus for a film screening and Q&A session.
