3. Ongoing Opportunities for Engagement or Action

- Contact the ISSS staff to offer support if you are willing to volunteer in any way.
- Korbey Asylum Project is looking for researchers.
 - The Korbey Asylum Project partners with local attorneys in the Denver area whose clients are submitting political asylum applications. Through their partnership with the attorney, Asylum project researchers receive the testimony from the client that will be included in their application and use it to guide research on how likely it is that this individual will or will not be persecuted if they were deported. This is a fantastic project because student researchers benefit by being able to apply human rights research to "real life" scenarios, the partner attorneys represent these clients on a pro bono basis and can put more effort to the legal arguments of the case, and the asylum seekers, who are often indigent, do not have to pay for quality human rights reports. It is an especially pertinent issue at the moment, and the project is always looking for new participants to help as a researcher. If anyone is interested, email korbeyasylumproject@gmail.com.

- From Refugee Council USA (RCUSA) –
 - Meet locally with members of Congress, who will be in their home districts during the February recess. The recommended date for these meetings is February 22. At the end of December, a number of former Congressional staffers published a very practical guide for engaging members of Congress, based on their years of experience of what works and what does not work for conveying a message.
 - Read this guide – Indivisible. It has been generating a lot of national action and discussion. Here is the link: <https://www.indivisibleguide.com/download-the-guide>
