The Wonders Of Service Animals

What do we know about the benefits of human-animal interaction? Have you ever looked deeply into the eye of a companion animal and felt that you were known, or had a trustworthy pet wait patiently for you to get home from work and welcome you like a best friend? The presence of animals stimulates communication with individuals who are socially marginalized, isolated or no longer trust human relationships. Animals provide a socially normative source for touch and physical contact while reducing blood pressure, anxiety, loneliness and depression. They have been shown to decrease the debilitating impacts of trauma and stress-related conditions. Professor Philip Tedeschi, Executive Director for the Institute for Human-Animal Interaction, will lead you on a compelling investigation into the many ways that animals and people intersect and influence each other.

Using DU's Electronic Resources

Who needs books?

The Anderson Academic Commons is a 21st century library. It has nearly 1,000 electronic sources of information. Familiarize yourself with this digital world and learn to use some of these resources at a special event for retirees. Chris Brown will explain electronic resources and conduct a hands-on demonstration of their use.

Monday, November 3rd, 1-3 pm

Anderson Academic Commons, the Loft

Parking: Use Visitor Parking Spaces South of Mary Reed

Please email Pat Fisher at pfisher@du.edu if you would like to attend

Chancellor Rebecca Chopp

Dr. Rebecca Chopp, 18th Chancellor of the University

A new chapter in the University of Denver's 150-year history opened Sept. 1, when Rebecca Chopp began her tenure as the institution's 18th chancellor. The first woman to hold the University's top position, Chopp succeeds Robert Coombe, whose 33 years at DU culminated in his chancellorship from 2005-14.

Chopp, 62, brings to the post more than 20 years of experience in higher education leadership. Most recently, she served as president of Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. Before that, she was president of Colgate University, dean of the Yale Divinity School, and provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at Emory University.

"Dr. Chopp is a distinguished scholar and academic leader who has taken two top-20 liberal arts colleges through the development of strategic plans that positioned those institutions to navigate through the complex challenges facing higher education today," says Doug Scrivner, Board of Trustees chairman. "University members—including student leaders, faculty, administration, staff, alumni and trustees—who participated in the final interviews were uniform in their enthusiastic support of Dr. Chopp."

Dr. Chopp said she is "pleased and proud to join a great research University that holds in the highest regard academic quality, value for students and service to the public good."
