In Progress:

Banking on Markets: The Transformation of Bank-State Ties in Europe and Beyond (book manuscript in preparation). This study argues that traditional bank-state ties are under threat because of liberalization in other spheres. While it has become harder for states to use their banks as sources of institutional distinctiveness and as tools for maintaining or regaining competitiveness in the global economy, it is also the case that high levels of foreign bank ownership do not pose the threat so often feared or theorized. The book examines the changing costs and consequences of banking sector protectionism and market opening through three empirical realms: the behavior of foreign and domestic banks in crisis, the distribution of regulatory power, and the pathways to adjustment and competitiveness in the global economy. Prospectus and three chapters completed. Estimated date of completion: 12/2015.

Edited Books:

International Influence beyond Conditionality: Postcommunist Europe after EU Enlargement, with Ulrich Sedelmeier, Routledge (2009). Reprint of the JEPP special issue listed above. Paperback edition published in January, 2013.
