Medical School Applications

How do I make application to medical schools? Most medical schools participate in coordinated online application processes through AMCAS or AACOM. Visit these websites to learn more.

Which medical schools participate in AMCAS or AACOM? Only a few medical schools do not participate in AMCAS or AACOM. To learn more about what those schools require for application and letters of recommendation, visit their admissions information sites online.

How are letters of recommendation submitted? When you activate your online application, you will generate letter ID numbers for each individual who will be submitting a letter on your behalf. Print the barcode page and deliver it to each evaluator along with a copy of your academic record and either a personal statement or a resume that outlines extracurricular activities (including volunteer, work and clinical experiences). Each letter writer will use the number code to electronically submit a letter.

If you have questions, be sure to contact the Biology Office.
