COLLEGE OF ARTS, HUMANITIES
& SOCIAL SCIENCES
Publishing Institute

ABOUT THE DPI

The Denver Publishing Institute is a four-week, graduate-level program dedicated to helping book lovers launch their publishing careers anywhere in the country. We introduce you to the process of book publishing: from editing, marketing, and production, to the bigger picture of digital publishing in a constantly changing world. Each summer, we bring students together with industry leaders who represent all aspects of book publishing—from small independent trade houses to large global media companies, from companies in the hub of book publishing in New York City to publishers from across the country.

You'll find some of our recent graduates at Penguin Random House; HarperCollins; Oxford University Press; Sourcebooks; Simon & Schuster; Walt Disney Company; Chronicle Books; Hachette Book Group; Princeton University Press; Andrews McMeel Universal; Workman Publishing; W.W.Norton & Company, and many more.

Over the course of four weeks, you'll obtain a solid educational foundation and become part of our community and nationwide network of publishing professionals. Come join us this summer in beautiful Colorado.

PROGRAM FORMAT AND CONTENT

During the Editing Workshop, you will engage with the various stages of editing by working on actual manuscripts. You will have the opportunity to practice editorial skills such as the preparation of a reader's report, substantive manuscript editing, copyediting, and proofreading.

The Editing Workshop is directed by Karl Weber, President, Karl Weber Literary, former Editor and Publisher with McGraw-Hill, John Wiley & Sons, Times Business/Random House; and Nan Gatewood Satter, Independent Book Editor, former Editor with Doubleday, with help from Cory Hunter, Independent Book Editor and former Editor with Doubleday.

During the Marketing Workshop, you will gain practical experience writing a publicity release for an actual manuscript, learn to identify target audiences and develop a complete marketing plan. The Marketing Workshop is directed by Carl Lennertz, Executive Director, Children's Book Council and Every Child a Reader, Publishing Consultant, and former Vice President, Marketing at Random House, HarperCollins, and Little, Brown.

In addition to hands-on workshops, prominent publishing executives from every area of the business will share their expertise on a broad range of publishing issues.

Field trips round out the intensive course of instruction, including trips to the nationally known Tattered Cover Book Store in Denver, CO and Hachette's Perseus Books Group in Boulder, CO.

CAREER GUIDANCE/NETWORKING

Throughout the program, you will find opportunities for career guidance. Human resource specialists answer questions and provide tips on résumés, cover letters, interviews, using LinkedIn, and making job connections. Job notifications are sent out to students throughout the Institute, and continue after graduation.

University of Denver Career Services starts things off with a motivational networking session. Then, during the four weeks of the Institute, opportunities abound for you to interact with the many publishing executives who come to Denver from all over the country. Faculty members join students at lunch, providing a chance to talk one-on-one, and after hours gatherings provide additional, informal opportunities to connect. Alumni of the Denver

Publishing Institute return to network with current students and share their first-hand job search success stories.

During the last week of the Institute, a day is set aside for mock interviews with a host of individuals from the book industry. You will have a practice interview to experience the process. Individuals working in varying areas of the publishing industry will hold informational and job-specific consultations.

Upon graduation from the Denver Publishing Institute, you will join a community of alumni dedicated to helping others find their place in the publishing world. After four weeks, you will have made valuable connections with the Institute faculty and staff, your fellow grads, and the publishing world at large.

"Attending DPI expanded my understanding of the book industry in profound ways. The in-depth programming and exceptional speakers gave me a leg up in landing the interview for my dream job, and enabled me to be so much more effective on my first day at Penguin Random House than I would have been otherwise. DPI changed my life, and I'd do it all over again if I could!"

JUSTIN GOODFELLOW
SALES MANAGER, PENGUIN RANDOM HOUSE
DPI '14 GRADUATE
