APPENDIX B

Procedures for Suspected Employee Impairment at Work

These procedures describe the steps to follow when dealing with an employee who appears to be impaired while at work and the resources available to the employee.

The University recognizes that impairment may be due to the use of alcohol or other substances or may be due to medical and/or psychological conditions. The University encourages employees to seek appropriate professional advice and treatment to address concerns about their use of alcohol or other substances. The University provides resources, including the Employee Assistance Program, to help employees respond to such concerns.

The supervisor should document their observations about the employee's demeanor and behavior, such as the employee's speech, movements, or any odor of alcohol.

Due to safety considerations, an employee who is impaired cannot remain at their workplace because of the increased risk of accidents and/or dangerous or inappropriate behavior. For the safety and well-being of the impaired employee and others, it is important that the impaired employee leave the workplace promptly in a safe and non-disruptive manner.

If an employee appears to pose an immediate threat of personal harm to themselves or others or potential for damage to University property, the supervisor should contact the Division of Campus Safety for assistance. If the employee does not pose an immediate threat, then the supervisor should contact the Division of Human Resources & Inclusive Community (HRIC) and notify the HRIC representative that the employee may be in violation of the University's alcohol policy.

To the extent permitted by law, the University may require any employee to submit to a blood alcohol test administered by University-designated laboratories or physicians, a breath alcohol test, or other scientifically acceptable method, as deemed appropriate by the University. If the blood alcohol test indicates that the employee has a blood alcohol level of 0.08% or higher, the employee will be deemed to be under the influence of alcohol. An employee who refuses to consent to an alcohol test will be subject to disciplinary action. A written admission of being under the influence of alcohol may be allowed in lieu of testing.
