Nineteen Transportation Leaders Graduate from the Transportation Institute

Graduation Celebration Held in June at the University of Denver

DENVER— The Transportation Institute at the University of Denver (DTI) is pleased to announce the graduation of the fifteenth cohort of students who completed their executive master’s degree in Transportation Management. On June 7, the University of Denver hosted a celebration for the nineteen graduates, who were presented with their master’s degree hoods.

“I want to congratulate the graduates of Cohort 15 for the great accomplishment of completing the program, but also for bonding together and forming such a supportive and engaged environment during their time at DTI,” said Adriene Bailey, Co-Executive Director of DTI. “I am confident they will stay in touch with each other and continue to support one another from here forward.”

Speakers at the graduation event included Bailey, Michael McGuire, Dean of University College where DTI is housed, and Robert “Buck” Rogers, a member of the graduating cohort. Rogers, the Assistant Vice President of Petroleum and Chemicals at CN of Canada, discussed the value of the education and the bonds formed with his peers.

“The master’s in Transportation Management at the University of Denver is both challenging and rewarding,” he said. “Not only did we learn from some of the best academic professionals in the industry, but the real education came from our fellow cohort participants who live and work in the transportation world every day.”

The executive Master of Science in Transportation Management develops the next generation of senior leaders in the transportation, logistics, and supply chain industries by providing all the advantages of a graduate management degree with the added value of learning transportation best practices. The program can be completed in 18 months by attending six 1-week residencies and an international trip.

DTI is currently finalizing Cohort 17 and a few openings remain for the class that will matriculate on October 8, 2018 in Denver. Applications are being accepted through July 2018. More information is available at www.du.edu/transportation.
